

Trak · Character Building Feature

Where we'd value your expertise — for review with a sports psychologist

Trak is a football development app. Today the coach is the main user — they log sessions and rate players — while the young players are largely passive. We want to add a character-building feature: it teaches behavioural skills to the players, gives them an active role, and shows the coach each player's character progress alongside performance — "the complete player."

Given your work leading sports psychology at Panathinaikos across both the youth setup and the first team, your practical, on-the-ground insight would be invaluable in shaping this properly — more than any framework could give us.

What we've drafted so far

- Six values: Composure · Respect · Effort · Teamwork · Responsibility · Sportsmanship (plus carrying them beyond football).
- How it's delivered: short, gamified moments triggered when the coach logs a training or match — learn (flashcards) → apply (a real football dilemma) → act (a real-world challenge to do at training). A weekly value focus; content deepens over the season.
- Age-appropriate (our responsibility, not the coach's): content auto-matched to the team's age, in three rough bands — ~6–9 (concrete, rule-based), ~10–13 (fairness and consequences), ~14–18 (abstract, identity, leadership).
- No grading or ranking: progress shows as streaks, badges, and a "character" lens on the player card — never a score, never one child compared to another.

Where we'd value your help (exactly)

1. The values — from your academy experience, are these the right behaviours to build in young players, and which matter most at each age?
2. What actually works — how did you develop character and conduct with youth players in practice? What real methods should we be encoding, not guessing?
3. Age-appropriateness — are our age bands and their complexity right? What is realistic to expect a child to understand and do at each stage?
4. Engagement vs. authenticity — does gamifying character (badges, streaks) help, or risk kids "performing" for rewards instead of meaning it? How do you keep it genuine?
5. Self-reflection — is asking young players to reflect on their own behaviour useful and safe at these ages? How honest are they, and how should we handle that?
6. Red lines — anything here you'd avoid or change: content, tone, or what we claim it does.

The ask

A conversation to pressure-test and reshape this with your experience — and whether you'd be open to reviewing the content and advising as we build.
